

reserve, which is surrounded by petrochemical plants.

The ultimate goal of hosting her talk is to educate the community and see if anyone would be interested in the

“She was very interested in the study we helped author,” said Jim Brophy, executive director of Sarnia’s Occupational Health Clinic for Ontario Workers. “She’s concerned type of studies could inform the initial findings.

The talk happens at Maawn Doosh Gumig Community Centre from 6 to 8 p.m.